Case Study:
Feather Pay

The Client

A $1.5 billion healthcare division of a Fortune 500 conglomerate. This division sells consumer medical devices in eCommerce and Telesales channels.

The Problem

The Client was losing sales because patients could not afford the out-of-pocket cost required to purchase their medical devices. Patients often decided to go with lower-priced, and thus lower quality, products. Sometimes, patients had to forego care altogether.

This issue was particularly acute in Telesales, where patients generally abandoned the purchase due to their inability to pay after the Client's Telesales agent had invested significant time and effort in device selection.

In an effort to improve affordability, the Client implemented a variety of payment options beyond credit and debit cards, including FSA, ACH debit, consumer financing and mobile payments. While these payment options had a modest impact, they created additional complexity in the sales and checkout process. The Client saw diminishing returns from each new payment type offered, and mounting lost sales.

Our Solution

Our implementation of Feather Pay had two main objectives:

Improve conversion rate by allowing patients to allocate their out-of-pocket payment across multiple payment types, driving higher average order value and reducing lost sales.

Simply explain the various payment methods available to patients, and to more clearly draw attention to the benefits of each.

Our Feather Pay implementation elegantly combined the Client's existing payment types into a single intuitive user interface. And because Feather Pay connects payments to the order management system, no new reconciliation processes were required by the Client's accounting group.

The Results

Feather Pay transactions led to a 7% increase in overall revenue in the first 30 days.

Average order value for these orders was 16% higher than non-Feather Pay orders.

Ancillary benefits of the implementation included a rise in overall sales rep conversion and productivity. This was attributed to more natural conversations between sales rep and the patient created by the simplified workflow, which subsequently led to increased patient satisfaction scores.

Feather Pay was so successful that the Client determined that their ability to better accommodate patients' financial means was a key differentiator versus the competition. As a result, they have adjusted their marketing messaging to emphasize affordability and expanded their target market to include previously untapped lower-income demographics.
